More businesses are beginning to respond to the impact of dementia on both customers and employees.

Businesses have begun to address the questions of how to meet the needs of customers with dementia and their care partners, as well as the needs of employees who are caring for someone with the disease.

Customer Perspective

- With 70% of people with dementia living at home, they and their family care partners will choose businesses that are easy to navigate and that have helpful, aware staff.
- Dementia friendly business is good business that will help retain existing customers and employees and attract new ones.

Employee Perspective

- Alzheimer’s disease costs US businesses more than $34 billion a year in lost productivity due to absenteeism by primary care partners, workday distractions, supervisory time, and reductions in hours. ¹
- Magnitude: 15 million people care for someone with Alzheimer’s and 6.6 million of those people are employed.
- Baby boomers are a valued, experienced segment of the workforce. They are the primary population caring for a spouse or parent with dementia as well the generation most likely affected by early onset of the disease.
- Businesses that support their caregiving employees are not just benevolent – they are smart: every $1 companies spend on eldercare support reaps a $3 to $14 return.²

Dementia Friendly Business & Environment Practices

Business Tips:

• Treat all customers with respect and dignity, including those with dementia and their care partners.
• Foster a connection with the customer’s care partners when appropriate, especially when important transactions are involved, to help protect the customer’s interests.
• Learn more and continue to implement new ways to be responsive to needs of customers with dementia and their care partners.

Environment Tips:

• Provide quiet places to sit and relax.
• Indoor environments should be safe and accessible for people with dementia: well-lit hallways, uncluttered spaces, and prominent, easy-to-understand signs for restrooms and other important places.

Support Employee Care Partners

• Talk with employees and show that you understand they are juggling two jobs – one as a care partner, and one working for you.
• Help employees connect to community resources.
• Establish policies and practices supportive to care partners, such as work schedule flexibility, and inform employees of these policies.
• Ask for employee feedback on company’s responsiveness and efforts to support elder care partner needs.
